Makarand went to the high school in his small city. Makarand liked his small classroom. The library was just an old wooden cupboard painted bright yellow. There were not many books in it and he had read of them many times. One day the teacher asked them what <sup>they</sup> would do if they had a five hundred rupees. Everyone gave different answers. Makarand replied that he would buy a table. Everyone along with the other students found it odd and the children mocked at him. Makarand was very fond of reading and loved to learn new words. One day, he decided to write a story on his own. Then he realised that why he wanted a table because all writers sat at tables when they wrote.

He told this thing to his mother but she didn't take him seriously. He started discussing new stories along with his father but his father discouraged him. One day, his teacher announced a story writing competition' organised by a leading news-paper. Makarand was very excited. He started writing a story and when he finished, he mailed his story to the newspaper office. Time went by. He regularly checked the newspaper for the result of the competition. Finally, the result was printed in the newspaper. He won consolation prize to his great delight. He won one hundred rupees. Money didn't matter to him but he was happy because he completed the story all by himself.
