In a London shop Hilda Mond was looking at two handbags. Her husband was sitting quietly on a chair waiting for her. The shop girl was very kind. She opened the blue handbag and showed Hilda for the tenth time. Hilda opened the white bag and looked at them together. They both cost the same. But the white bag was more spacious than the blue one. Finally she got the blue handbag. They walked to the station and got into the train to Liverpool. Unfortunately, she did not like the blue handbag because she thought the white handbag could go with any other colour. Her husband decided to change the bag before the train left. He ran out of the station with the blue handbag.

in his hand. He looked so strange while running that people were turning round to watch him. A policeman stopped Tom because he thought he had stolen the bag. Tom along with the policeman reached the same shop from where he got the bag. The shop girl recognised Tom and the policeman walked out of the shop with an angry look. The shop girl changed the bag. She put it in a paper bag and he ran out of the shop and along the street to the station. He reached the station, but he was on the wrong side of the road. At last he ran across the road in front of two taxis. Angry cries followed him. Finally he reached the station and got in the train. When Hilda opened the bag, she found the wrong white bag.
