Chapter: 7 “Charlie and The Chocolate Factory” part - II

Good morning students,

Today let us read and understand the extract taken from a well-known novel “Charlie and the Chocolate factory” written by Roald Dahl, Chapter-7 in your English Reader.

The passage is from a scene in Charlie and the Chocolate Factory where Mr. Wonka takes the children into a magical room within his factory.

Mr. Wonka leads the children into a magical room inside his chocolate factory, revealing an extraordinary scene. The children are excited but warned by Mr. Wonka not to get too carried away. When he opens the door, they find themselves standing before a breathtaking valley, unlike anything they've ever seen. Instead of ordinary features, the landscape is filled with wonders made of candy. There are green meadows, trees, bushes, and flowers, but the most astounding feature is a large brown river flowing through the valley—made entirely of melted chocolate. Mr. Wonka proudly declares that every drop of the river is the finest quality chocolate, enough to fill bathtubs and swimming pools.

The children are stunned by the sight, unable to speak due to the sheer grandeur of the place. They are amazed not only by the size of the chocolate river but by the fact that everything around them seems to be edible. Mr. Wonka continues to point out that even the trees, bushes, and grass are made from candy. The grass, called "swudge," is a new invention of vanilla and peppermint sugar, and he invites everyone to try a piece. Charlie and Grandpa Joe are particularly taken with the taste, with Charlie whispering to his grandfather how wonderful it is. Grandpa Joe, delighted by the experience, jokes that he could eat the entire field like a cow.

Their journey continues as Mr. Wonka introduces the next mode of transportation: a boat made from a giant boiled sweet, gleaming pink with stripes. The boat looks like it's made of glass and leaves everyone in awe. As it glides up the chocolate river, Mr. Wonka invites Charlie and Grandpa Joe to sit with him. Charlie, filled with excitement, wonders if everything he's experiencing is real or just a dream.

As they move down the river, Mr. Wonka dips a mug into the chocolate and hands it to Charlie, encouraging him to drink. Knowing that Charlie and his family have been struggling with hunger, Mr. Wonka kindly offers this warm, rich treat, commenting on Charlie's thinness. Charlie drinks the chocolate, and the sensation fills his entire body with happiness, a stark contrast to the poverty he's used to. Grandpa Joe also enjoys the chocolate, marvelling at how creamy and delicious it is.

This scene is a blend of fantasy and warmth, highlighting the magic of Mr. Wonka's factory, where everything is designed to enchant and delight. The chocolate river and edible landscape create a dreamlike experience for the children, especially for Charlie, who comes from a life of scarcity. The warmth and richness of the chocolate, shared with Charlie and Grandpa Joe, offer a moment of joy and comfort, symbolizing the generosity and magic that defines Willy Wonka's world.

This passage conveys the whimsical and surreal atmosphere of Willy Wonka's chocolate factory, where ordinary rules don't apply, and everything is designed to amaze and delight. It also underscores the contrast between Charlie's poverty and the abundance he finds in the factory. The scene is filled with magic, sensory delights, and hints at deeper themes like hope and joy amid hardship.
